JOIN DENTAQUEST IN MAKING A DIFFERENCE

DentaQuest, the largest sponsor of government programs in the nation, invites you to join our provider network in New York to bring quality dental care to underserved populations. You can make a positive impact on the oral health needs of managed-care members in your area.

As a network provider, you have access to:
- A local provider relations representative
- An easy-to-use web portal for verifying member eligibility, submitting claims, obtaining preauthorization and more
- Fast, hassle-free, real-time claims processing
- Flexible options that allow you to focus on your patients, not paperwork

We look forward to having you join us in our mission to improve the oral health of all.

For more information and to sign up online, visit DentaQuest.com/ny/dentists.
Our mission: “cultivate and promote the art and science of dentistry, to protect and improve the health of the public whom we are privileged to serve, and to represent the interests of the members of the dental profession at the national, state and local levels.”

Now enter the “do it yourself teeth straightening clubs”. Patients have a choice at a DIY location to have a digital scan taken by a non-dentist or take their own dental impressions at home. The impressions, digital or conventional, will then be reviewed by a “licensed dentist or orthodontist”, who will then develop a treatment plan without a direct clinical examination, that takes “on average six months to complete”. The patient is then sent a preview of the final result, and after a signed approval with a hold harmless clause, straightening aligners are fabricated and treatment can begin.

I’m an Oral and Maxillofacial Surgeon who went to dental school in the last millennium, but I have some serious patient safety issues with this model of care. I was taught we should evaluate the entire dental health of the patient before initiating treatment. We start our evaluation of a patient with a chief complaint that includes a discussion regarding what the patient’s goals and expectations are. We then move on to a complete medical and dental history, physical examination, radiographs, study models, and formulate a diagnosis and a treatment plan. Findings are presented to the patient. Goals, expectation and risks are discussed with the patient. During our consultation we develop a rapport with the patient. Treatments are then carried out in a logical sequence; oral and maxillofacial pathology, pulpitis and acute infections are treated first, followed by periodontal treatment, and removal a dental caries with final restorations. Once we’ve achieved oral health, we move on to anyone met needs understanding the fact, if we try to orthodontically move teeth that are not healthy we may cause harm. The infamous Hippocratic Oath has always been “do no harm”. Today all first-year dental students at The Stony Brook School of Dental Medicine and many other dental schools take this Hippocratic oath.

Licensed Dental therapy has predictable results and has stood the test of time. We reduce complications by not taking short cuts. This is called practicing to the “Standard of Care”: tried and true measures that will provide the best long-term outcome while minimizing risks to patients. If a member dentist initiated orthodontic treatment without an exam, radiographs and a complete treatment plan, we would consider that member to be practicing below the standard of care. If the patient had an unfavorable result and brought that member to Peer Review; we would question the member dentist for practicing below the Standard of Care. If the member dentist continued this substandard care, we would consider this unethical and they could be removed from the dental society.

Unfortunately, lawmakers and regulatory agencies are not completely convinced of our intentions. They may feel that we are trying to restrict free trade. We’re,” protecting our turf”. This could not be further from the truth! It’s all about providing quality oral health care, accessible to everyone. We are trying to protect the public from substandard care. Advocacy for the oral health of the public,

Fourth and Long

Maybe mid-baseball season isn’t the time for a football reference. Nonetheless, fourth and long is a football expression generally referring to decision time; either you continue to move the ball forward, or you strategically decide, not yet, for now we’ll rely on our defense to move us forward. This is my fourth bulletin article. It marks my one year anniversary here, and the closure of a four-part loosely connected set of articles I’ve shared.

There is no specific decision point for me at this time, but my observations of the industry and more specifically of this society are more informed. What is unchanged and in fact is even more evident, is the commitment of this society’s leadership. The line officers’ (President, President-Elect, Vice-President, Secretary, and Treasurer) time and effort goes well beyond what most members could even imagine, as well as the Board of Directors and past Presidents, several of whom additionally remain active at the State and National level as well as in other industry organizations. Their volunteerism and advocacy for the profession is INCREDIBLE. All members (and non-members) owe them a debt of gratitude larger than most will ever realize. All the while, in the many factions and circles we run in, there are decisions to be made. The rationale of those decisions may not be fully understood by all. These are volunteers, there are many circles, there is only so much time, and a non-stop, never ending stream of information. However, the siblinois of this society endeavors to understand and jointly move the ball forward for the betterment of the profession and the patients being served.

The “long” portion of my article title is my realization of just how long it takes to really make a meaningful change, or even implement important refinements. It refers to long days and nights, long meetings and conversations, and the long patience required by all involved. It refers to the long list of things we are keen to advance, and the long list of prerequisites and follow-ups to attend to.

Some may say membership retention and growth is key. Surely there is truth to that at the tripartite scale. Locally, strengthening harmony and unity will empower the team to address this and the other items on the long list. We’ll be focusing there!

Are you faced with fourth and long? Maybe it’s time you stepped up your involvement in this society. There is much to do and you may find it rewarding as many leaders here have. Or, maybe you just feel it’s your turn to do your part for the profession you’re passionate about. Move the ball down field, then hand off to another. Regardless, we need your help, ideas and enthusiasm.

Please don’t hesitate to ring me or any of our officers. Give us a ring in the office at 631-232-1400 or email me at SCDSEXEC@SuffolkDental.Org.

Communication is the key!

“It all began with my tooth”, not my tooth, but with the tooth of a quite famous actor, Alan Alda. His book, If I understood you, would I have this look on my face, explains how the unexpected outcome of a dental visit ignited his passion for teaching the Art and Science of Relating and Communicating. One of his goals is to help Scientists, Physicians, Dentists, and other professionals improve their skills when lecturing, discussing techniques, procedures, or providing patients with information or instructions. Clear communication is especially important when the person or audience is not familiar with Scientific, Medical, or Dental Terminology. We encounter this dilemma every day with our patients, our colleagues, staff, friends, and families. We may experience a lack of understanding ourselves while attending a lecture or possibly during our own medical appointment. The speaker may use acronyms or jargon and we may become lost or disinterested and miss valuable information.

Our colleague, Dr. Scott Goldstein, recently wrote an article about the importance of better communication when referring our patients. He reminds us how an open communication between clinicians will improve the outcome for the patient. Clear explanations, in plain language, will help the patient understand why they need care and why they are being referred. The doctor who receives the referral will not waste time trying to determine why the patient is there and the patient will feel confident that both doctors are working in unison for his/her benefit.

Several key elements that were discussed in the book are empathy, active listening, and the importance of a clear message. He especially focused on the importance of empathy and mentioned one study which showed the more empathetic the doctor was, the better the outcome, and the more likely the patient was to follow the doctor’s recommendations. I am sure we may all have experienced this in our own practices or personal lives. I hope this is a helpful refresher in communication and if you are interested in learning more on this topic you can listen to the many Podcasts discussing Communication, Empathy, and Medicine on “Clear + Vivid with Alan Alda”.

Alan Alda is a seven-time Emmy Award winner. He has starred in, written, and directed many films and was nominated for an Academy Award. He hosted the award-winning PBS series Scientific American Frontiers and has received numerous awards for his work communication science. He was named a fellow of the American Physical Society for his work in helping scientists improve their communication skills. Mr. Alda is a Visiting Professor at Stony Brook University’s Alan Alda Center for Communicating Science.

My journey as a New Dentist, getting involved and making a difference

Something that most people don’t know about me, but are always surprised to find out is that I was not involved in ASDA in dental school, at all. Yes, organized dentistry is now a large part of my professional and personal life— but in school, my focus was the next practical, the next exam block, and getting through the next week. I had my circle of friends and colleagues, and for me that was enough. After graduation, and as everyone inevitably moved away to begin their careers, I was left missing the sense of camaraderie that helped me get through each grueling year of my dental education. I am fortunate enough to have found that in my local component, and state dental association. From engaging with students and residents, to meeting new dentists from across our state and country, I finally feel that I have found my tribe, my people, again. As Chair of the New York State Dental Association New Dentist Committee, my committee members and I work hard to foster this sense of belonging, and ultimately, the importance of getting involved in securing our professions future, to everyone we meet and work with.

I often get asked “why should new dentists get involved with or even care about advocacy”. It’s hard enough to manage life today – practice, family, bills, employees, friends and NYSDA responsibilities - let alone getting involved with politics. However, as I have gotten more active with organized dentistry I’ve learned from those slightly older than I just how important advocacy and understanding government really is.

How we practice; where we practice; what it takes to become a dentist; how we manage our patients; who can treat our patients; how we bill for our services; how we manage our employees or how our boss’s manage us; how much money we take home (taxes); our malpractice insurance; our student loan rates; how we sterilize; waste management; radiology; and on and on and on. With this kind of intrusion, why wouldn’t we get involved? As the late Dr. Loren Feldner, past Chair of the American Dental Political Action Committee, once famously said, “if you’re not at the table, then you’re on the menu.”

Dentistry needs to be at the table, and it is in every State House and in Washington, DC, but the new dentist’s voice isn’t there strongly enough. We need to change that. This is our profession and we are its future. It’s time to be part of the conversation so we can determine our direction and dentistry’s future. We cannot leave that in the hands of politicians, insurance companies, corporations or any other advocacy group. It is ours, let’s own it.

I ask all of the NYSDA new dentists to get active in dentistry’s politics. Understand what NYSDA is fighting for on our behalf and how you can help. Write your legislator and try to get to meet them. Let them know your opinion on the NYSDA advocacy issues. Together, we will make a difference.

Remember, NYSDA and the ADA don’t represent a political party, they represent our profession. It’s time for us to have a seat at the table too. Start today, if you’re a new dentist, get involved in your local new dentist committee, learn about governmental affairs and help shape outcomes.

Dr. Amrita Patel graduated from the New York University College of Dentistry in 2011, and completed a general practice residency in 2012 from the Nassau University Medical Center. She is the chair of the New York State Dental Association’s New Dentist Committee, and serves as a delegate to the House of Delegates in New York. In 2017, she was awarded membership into the Pierre Fauchard Academy, an honorary dental service organization, and in 2018 she became a fellow of the International College of Dentists- USA Section. Dr. Patel and her father own multiple specialty group practices in metro NYC.

Patients and practice: Online Reviews

Question: Mr. Smith is an older patient who presents with challenges at every dental visit. He is consistently late for his appointments, does not pay his balance when payment is due, and regularly reschedules his appointments. Recently, as clockwork, Mr. Smith arrives late, apologizes profusely, but does not offer an excuse for being late. I accommodated Mr. Smith that day and completed the dental treatment as scheduled. At the end of the appointment, I calmly explained to him that if he cannot be on time and follow through with his commitments with the office, it may be necessary to terminate the dentist-patient relationship. The dental assistants were stunned that I would say such a thing to any patient, let alone Mr. Smith. The next week another long-time patient mentioned to the receptionist that he read a scathing review about me on YELP and found the review written by TS. The review reads in part, “besides doing sub-standard work, Dr. Jones is rude, insensitive and does not relate well to patients. This dentist should be avoided!” At first, I was angry and upset as any dental professional would be reading such a negative review. I value my reputation and was deeply offended by the injustice of this review. Critical reviews can cause lasting damage to any dental practice. This is a reality in the world we live in. The following day, I decided it was time to terminate my relationship with Mr. Smith. I reached out to my local dental society and took the necessary steps to terminate the relationship ethically. My question is, what are the ethical issues in responding to the negative online review?

Answer: It is important to remember The American Dental Association Principles of Ethics and Code of Professional Conduct (the Code) when dealing with patient reviews. Online review sites have dramatically changed the way patients seek dental care.

According to Ceatus Medical Group, as many as 63 percent of consumers who are considering any type of cosmetic dentistry procedure find online reviews to be a vital part of their decision-making process. Positive reviews are critical for dental practices. Take the time to respond to a positive review by thanking the reviewer, mentioning your company name so that review will show up on search engine results, briefly describe the dental services that you provide. Remember, responding to positive reviews is out there for all to read. Be as polite as you can.

The ethics of reviews and ratings can get very complicated. Do not offer patient discounts for positive reviews on future treatment so that patients do not feel any pressure to provide a review or that a review will impact their treatment. This should not seem as if you are offering a rebate. Advisory Opinion 4. E. 1. Prohibits “dentist’s accepting or tendering rebates or split fees . . . [in] business dealings between dentists and any third party . . .”

Most, if not all of us take negative reviews as a personal attack individually or on our practice. Take a deep breath and do not respond immediately. Be

Behavior Guidance for Challenging Pediatric Patients

COURSE SYNOPSIS:
Behavior guidance is a continuum of interaction involving the dentist and dental team, the patient, and the parent directed toward communication and education.* The goal of effective behavior guidance is to reduce anxiety, fear and apprehension while developing the comprehension and value of sound oral health and a lifelong dental home. This presentation will discuss methods for accurately assessing a child’s development, temperament, personality and fears. Such an assessment allows for prediction of, and preparation for, a child’s behavior and response to dental treatment. Behavior guidance for infants, children, adolescents, and persons with special health care needs, with a variety of non-pharmacological techniques, will be discussed. This presentation will also describe patient selection and an approach to customize behavior guidance techniques to the individual patient in order to provide care that is both safe and effective.

Management of Early Childhood Caries

COURSE SYNOPSIS:
Early childhood caries is the most common chronic childhood disease, more common than asthma or ear infections. Millions of school days are lost worldwide every year due to poor oral health. Early assessment, ideally by age one, and early intervention are the best strategies for providing good oral health for young children. This strategy will also set them on the path for good lifelong oral health as adults. Clinical studies have suggested that a variety of risk factors exist for this transmissible infection. This presentation will discuss the newest concepts in caries prevention beginning prenatally through age six. Several prevention protocols will be presented with an emphasis on those techniques with measurable outcome data. Management of incipient and gross lesions will also be discussed with emphasis on caries arrest and minimally invasive techniques and materials.

Dr. Moursi is Professor and Chair of the Department of Pediatric Dentistry at the New York University College of Dentistry and on the Medical Staff at the New York University Langone Medical Center and the Bellevue Hospital Center in New York. Safety and Simplicity in Root Canal Instrumentation: myths, metal and motion

COURSE CONTENT: Nearly 25 years after the introduction of Nickel Titanium Rotary Files to endodontics, we’ve learned much about the clinical strengths and limitations of these great instruments. We must take advantage of these improvements to create an instrumentation protocol that combines Safety with Simplicity. As a result of recent advances in metallurgy, we now have both heat treated and non-heat treated rotary files. We have developed a blended technique that combines the advantages of both into one awesome Endodontic Technique!!! You will learn how to improve your instrumentation predictability while dramatically reducing instrument separation. Furthermore, a simple yet effective obturation method will be introduced that combines the latest in material science with endodontic synchronicity for passive, bonded root canal obturation.

At the conclusion of this lecture, participants will:
1. Learn how rotary file design influences instrumentation safety and efficiency.
2. Comprehend the advantages of heat-treated files and how best to use them.
3. Discover the most effective instrument motions available for shaping root canals and their advantages and limitations.
4. Fully understand the need to combine current technology with long established, evidence-based endodontic principles.
5. Fully appreciate the benefits of bioceramic obturation and the incorporation of matching posts.

About Dr Abdennour - Dr. Abdennour received his Doctor of Dental Medicine degree in 1989 from the Washington University School of Dental Medicine where he as well received the “outstanding clinical ability” award. In 2000 he received his specialty certificate in endodontics, as well as a Master in Medical Sciences in Oral Biology from the Advanced Graduate Endodontic Program at Harvard University School of Dental Medicine. Dr. Abdennour currently holds a faculty appointment as a clinical instructor at the Advanced Graduate Endodontic Program at the Harvard School of Dental Medicine where he teaches on a part-time basis micro-surgical and non-surgical endododontics.

careful in your response. Do not ignore it. It is out there for everyone to read including future patients. Negative reviews can be managed in such a way as to allow some credibility to your practice. Too many positive reviews may create a doubt of perfection to patients. Section 5 of the Code discusses the Principle of Veracity (“truthfulness”). Under this Principle, all dentists have a “duty to communicate truthfully.” Truth telling promotes respect for your patients. It “respect[s] the position of trust inherent in the dentist-patient relationship.” Publishing bad reviews shows that you have nothing to hide and may even promote your positive reviews.

The Principle of Veracity also “expresses the concept that professionals have a duty to be honest and trustworthy in their dealings with people . . . communicating truthfully and without deception, and maintaining intellectual integrity.” With this in mind, dental offices need to develop or have procedures in place to handle negative online reviews. All dentists, including new dentists and retiring dentist who may be looking to sell their practice, may be the subject of a negative review. The response to the review will help future patients decide if this is the type of practice that suits their needs.

A Review Tracker’s survey found that 94 percent of consumers have been convinced to avoid a business after a negative review. Responding to the complaint will show patients you care and take negative reviews seriously. It is also your way to make amends with the reviewing patient. Once again, your existing patients as well as future patients are reading your response. Keep it short and sweet and avoid any potentially identifiable information about the patient so as to respect the patient’s privacy. First, apologize for the negative experience that they have had and then try to move the conversation off line by suggesting they contact the office for assistance in addressing their complaint. Hopefully, by responding in this way, your reviewer will update their original review. Even if the reviewer does not you have done as the Preamble of the Code recommends, exhibited “[q]ualities of honesty, compassion, kindness, integrity, fairness and charity . . .” Never let a negative review go unnoticed. Do your best to correct the situation. This can be a learning experience for you and your staff.

In conclusion, responding to reviews is important. Ethical implications may exist, so understand the Code and each of the Principles as they can guide you to respond in a thoughtful manner. Take the time and make the effort to monitor your online presence and respond accordingly. Your success depends on it.
