“Special Education” is a wide range of services available to children who have special needs that make it difficult for them to learn in the classroom without additional help. The range of services available includes:

- Special learning time with a trained teacher called a resource specialist (aka RSP teacher). The child often leaves the regular classroom and works with the RSP teacher, usually in a small group setting. Sometimes the teacher will work with the child in the regular classroom.

- Special services such as adaptive P.E., speech and language, and counseling, provided by a special teacher outside the main classroom. These services may be offered one-on-one or in small group settings.

- Special classes specifically designed to meet a child’s unique educational needs that arise out of his or her disabilities (i.e., special day classes (SDC)).

- Special schools in which all the classes and the overall environment are geared toward servicing the needs of special education children.

- Special private schools called non-public schools in which a child can be placed if the school has no suitable classes in which to educate a child.

- Residential facilities in which a child can be placed that provide both a therapeutic living environment and a specially designed learning setting.

When are services available?

Services are available for birth to 22 years of age, depending upon the child’s needs. Services for children from birth to 3 years are called early intervention services. Services for children from 3 to 5 years are called preschool services. A student must be referred for special education services prior to the student’s 19th birthday.

How do I find out if my child qualifies for special education?

The general procedure is as follows:

- Write a letter to the school asking to have your child tested to see if he or she qualifies for special education services. Be sure to date the letter, sign it and say why you think your child might qualify for services. Keep a copy of this letter.

- Within 15 days the school must respond to your request by providing you with an assessment plan. This plan lists areas in which your child will be tested and the tests to be used. The school cannot test until you sign this plan. Keep a copy of the signed plan.

- Once the plan is signed, the district has 60 days (excluding school breaks longer than 5 days) to complete testing. When the testing is done, a meeting is held.

- If the meeting team (“IEP team”) decides the child qualifies for special education, an individualized education plan called an IEP will be written. It will set long term goals for (continued) your child’s development and short term objectives to help the child meet those goals. If you do not agree with part or all of the IEP, you can appeal the results of the meeting.

- If the IEP team decides your child does not qualify for services, you can appeal this decision. You have the right to get an independent evaluation as well.
- The IEP must be reviewed at least once a year. Parents must be invited to attend each of these review meetings. Every three years, the child is reevaluated as well.
- If you think your child is not making enough progress at any time during the year, you may request that an interim IEP meeting be held. To do this, write a letter to the school asking for an interim meeting. It must be scheduled within 30 days of the request.

What can be done if a child’s behavior interferes with progress toward IEP goals?

You can request that the school do a functional behavioral analysis assessment. Usually, the school psychologist conducts the assessment that involves observing your child in the classroom to identify problem behaviors, what triggers the behavior, what consequences are given and how the child responds. The assessment should identify strategies that the teacher can use to help control a child’s problem behaviors. An IEP meeting is then held to incorporate these strategies into the IEP as a behavioral intervention plan.

What else can be done to help a child who cannot control his or her behavior?

Behavior problems occur for a variety of reasons. Sometimes they are caused by a student’s frustration with classroom learning tasks. Other times behavior problems are caused by life trauma that results in emotional disturbance or a combination of these issues. For special education students who are experiencing serious emotional problems, Educationally-Related Mental Health Services (ERMHS) may be available.

Request an assessment for educationally-related mental health services in writing by delivering a letter to the office of your child’s school requesting an evaluation for intensive mental health services necessary to enable your child to benefit from education. Request that the assessment plan be provided to you for your signature within 15 days. Keep a copy of the letter you give to the school. Once you sign the assessment plan, the school has 60 days to complete the assessment and meet with you to discuss assessment findings and the need for additional related services for your child.

For more information, contact Mental Health Advocacy Services:

Mental Health Advocacy Services, Inc., is a private non-profit 501(c)(3) corporation. The mission of MHAS is to protect and advance the legal rights of children and adults with mental disabilities, in order to maximize autonomy, promote equality, and secure the resources needed to thrive in the community.

3255 Wilshire Blvd., Suite 902
Los Angeles, CA 90010
213-389-2077
www.mhas-la.org
Facebook
Twitter

“What is Special Education?”
mhas-la.org/SpecialEducation/SpEdGeneralDescription.pdf
©2012 Mental Health Advocacy Services, Inc.
Updated 03.16.12